Preparing Your Brand for Sale

Brand and reputation can account for as much as 50 to 75 percent of a company's market value. In this session, we will provide key areas of focus to help companies maximize that value prior to putting the company on the market. In doing so, companies make themselves more marketable for the sale as well as have the opportunity to increase negotiation leverage and garner a higher price.

Is Your Brand Insulated?

Whether you are running a campaign, gaining support for a major initiative, looking for funding, or managing an established company, your reputation with stakeholders can make for smooth sailing or an uphill battle. In this session, we'll learn about what you can do every day to improve your reputation and make the reputation you have positively impact the bottom line. We'll also look at how to insulate your reputation so that you survive the daily hurdles of business and come out even better on the other side of crisis.

The 6 Cs of Branding for HR Professionals

Branding is becoming part of the HR vernacular. Whether you are creating an internal brand for your employees, elevating your brand within an organization, or taking on the brand of your company through recruiting and corporate social responsibility/community relations initiatives, HR has inherited a seat at the corporate branding table. In this session, attendees will learn how their role in an organization is essential to creating a living brand and driving reputation for the company. We will explore the concepts around branding beyond marketing, learning how branding is actually a leadership function that is building trust currency for all stakeholders of a company both internal and external. We'll dive into six key focus areas including culture, communication, community, crosswalk, compliance, and crisis. The session will be a combination of principles and case studies created to provide takeaways that can be implemented immediately within an organization.

The Ultimate Differentiator

Reputation is a key to gaining competitive advantage and can be the Ultimate Differentiator for your brand in the marketplace. Brands have an opportunity to skillfully architect and insulate their reputation through culture, a living brand, customer journeys, and thought leadership. In this session, we'll guide attendees to think beyond traditional reputation management strategies in order to set their organizations apart. We'll look at the relationship between culture, brand, and reputation and how communication ties it all together.
