In 2016 he received the FEMA Community Preparedness Champion Award at the White House. He doesn't just study disasters—he has survived disasters.

Jamie got his start helping others amidst disasters after moving to South Mississippi just six days before Hurricane Katrina struck his community. Eight years later he diagnosed with late-stage cancer. Now in remission Jamie shares his disaster research and cancer story with scientific and spiritual insights, helping others cultivate faith and resilience.

His research has been supported by over $6 million in grant funding. In addition to over 100 scholarly publications, he is the co-editor and co-author of 7 academic books, including two American Psychological Association bestsellers. His disaster and humanitarian resources have been adopted and utilized by World Relief, Federal Emergency Management Agency, Department of Homeland Security, Chicago Department of Public Health, and many other organizations.

Jamie is a disaster columnist for Christianity Today's (CT) Church Law & Tax. His writing frequently appears in outlets that include The Washington Post, CT, and Psychology Today. Jamie is also regularly cited or interviewed by news outlets like CBS News, Fox News TV, Yahoo! News, Moody Radio, and Religion News Service.
