

Karen Drake

Assistant Professor at Bora Laskin Faculty of Law at Lakehead University

Thunder Bay, ON, CA

Karen Drake's teaching and research interests include Canadian law as it affects Indigenous peoples, Anishinaabe law, and Mā̃tis law.

Description

Karen Drake is a citizen of the Mā̃tis Nation of Ontario. Her research interests include the intersection between liberalism and Aboriginal rights, the duty to consult and accommodate Aboriginal peoples in the context of resource extraction, Mā̃tis legal issues, and the relationship between law and ethics when conducting research with human participants. She teaches Aboriginal Legal Issues, Indigenous Legal Traditions, Property Law, and Legal Philosophy.

Prof. Drake is a Commissioner with the Ontario Human Rights Commission, a Commissioner with the Commission on Mā̃tis Rights and Self-Government, a member of the Board of Directors of the Indigenous Bar Association, and a member of the Thunder Bay Mā̃tis Council. She serves as Vice-Chair of Lakehead University's Research Ethics Board, and as an alternate member of the Thunder Bay Regional Health Sciences Centre's Research Ethics Board. She is Co-Editor-in-Chief of the Lakehead Law Journal and was previously Co-Editor-in-Chief of the Indigenous Law Journal.

Prior to joining Lakehead University in July 2013, Prof. Drake practised with Erickson & Partners, focusing on Aboriginal legal issues, human rights, and labour and employment law. Prior to that, she articulated with Cassels Brock & Blackwell LLP. She completed a clerkship with the Ontario Court of Appeal, where she clerked for Justice Stephen Borins, Justice Susan Lang, Justice Harry LaForme, and Justice Gloria Epstein. She also served as a judicial law clerk to Justice Leonard Mandamin of the Federal Court.
