Clinical Associate Professor focused on sexual assault victims and psychotherapy.

Biography

KRISTEN ZALESKI is a sexual assault victim advocate, researcher, professor and psychotherapist in Southern California. Her decade-long work with sexual assault survivors spans inpatient and outpatient settings, and she has a dual specialty in civilian and military sexual trauma.

Zaleski has published research on treatment for sexual assault-related post-traumatic stress disorder and focused her dissertation research on the trauma of becoming pregnant from a rape during military service. Her book, Understanding and Treating Military Sexual Trauma, was released in April 2015, and it was showcased at the Los Angeles Times Festival of Books that same year. Her current research has centered on the incidence of rape culture in social media as well as the issue of empathy in social work education.

Zaleski continues to explore clinical phenomena in the areas of health social work, LGBTQI experiences, empathy, mothering, vicarious trauma and attachment-related trauma through a neurobiological lens. She also maintains a private practice in Los Angeles.
