Biography

"I was lucky to have a number of mentors who influenced my path in life, starting with my grandfather who at the age of 12 let me cut the lawn on my own for the first time. He included the admonishment to not touch the center spindle the blades were attached to because it got really hot and I could burn myself. So sure enough an hour or so later I ended up in the kitchen sniffing as my grandmother held my burnt finger under the running water. I was 12 after all and curious how hot it was. My grandfather came into the room, looked at the finger, looked at me, looked back at the finger and took one last look at me and walked out. Without saying a word he taught me what it was to be a man and be responsible for my actions. I'd like to think I've lead my life dedicated to being responsible for my actions and for how they affect the people around me."
