Description

Patricia S. Parker is an associate professor of Communication in UNC's College of Arts and Sciences. While conducting research for a book on the leadership approaches of African-American female executives a few years ago, Parker made the linkage in her mind between the life work of civil and human rights activist Ella Jo Baker, whom she had long admired as an unsung hero, and the personal stories of the executives who cited a grounding in community as being pivotal to their success. The Ella Baker Women's Center for Leadership and Community Activism is part of her evolving vision to promote the continued legacy of transformative leadership by women of color.

At UNC, Parker regularly teaches "Communication and Leadership;" "Group Communication;" "Interpretive Studies in Organizational Communication;" and "Seminar in Race, Ethnicity, and Organization." Her honors include: Kauffman Faculty Fellow, 2006-2007; Scholar in Residence, Center for Urban and Regional Studies, 2005; Affiliate Fellow, Institute of African American Research, 2003-present; Burress Fellow, Institute for the Arts and Humanities, 2002-present. Among Parker's recent publications are: "Race, Gender, and Leadership: Re-envisioning Organizational Leadership from the Perspectives of African American Women Executives;" "Keeping It Real: Race, Difference, and Corporate Ethics at Coca-Cola;" "Always at Risk?: African American Women Faculty, Graduate Students, and Undergraduates."

She is working on a book, "Ella's Daughters: Race, Gender and Community Organizing in the Era of the 'New Jim Crow.'"

She is the former Director of Faculty Diversity Initiatives for the College of Arts and Sciences (2012-2015).
