

Richie Hecker

Chief Catalyst at Traction + Scale

New York, NY, US

Entrepreneur and company turnaround magician with particular competence in digital media and direct marketing business investment strategies

Description

Richie Hecker is a NYC based entrepreneur. Most recently he led the acquisition of Bebo, once the #3 social network from AOL and turned it profitable within six months. Prior to Bebo, Richie founded and operated a number of profitable online advertising companies and an outsourcing company in India. In his spare time, he is a thought leader and investor. Richie launched a half dozen conferences, including NYC Entrepreneur Week. He holds a BS in Finance from Binghamton University.

I'm a lifelong entrepreneur. I start companies and invest in great ideas and turn around situations. My area of expertise is digital media and direct marketing. I built my network by being a super connector and event producer. I'm currently Executive Chairman of inSparq and a board member at Stakehouse, Buyinara and Andover Games through Stockton Equity.

Active Value Investing in Digital Media

You will learn how to combine start-up entrepreneurship and structured finance to 'value' assets and opportunities in a completely different way.

The session will feature a discussion on the concept of 'value' and digital media across the incubation, growth and distressed stages, followed by an interactive component where we will evaluate well known companies and dissect their 'value' together.

The Management Theory of Structured Chaos

Structured Chaos is a fresh approach to training, developing and managing the leaders of today. It's core principals are built on the foundation of positive thinking and being open to new ideas and feedback. Structured Chaos is all about training by doing and is a framework where you learn to manage by doing and by creating a structured framework around your activities, even while doing something new for the first time.
