But there are things we can learn from the history of technology, political revolution and change, and there is a playbook we can reuse to help us avoid easy mistakes and seemingly popular, but actually self-defeating approaches. The Five Most Dangerous Ideas

There are truths about how the world works that creatives don't like to talk about. We get angry and frustrated when we're not granted the power we think we deserve, but there are often good reasons the world works 'against us.' This session takes these ideas head on, from how power truly works, to our unavoidable dependence on salesmanship skills, so we can convert them from frustrations into practical behaviors for empowerment and achieving our dreams at work.

Why Designers Fail and What to Do About It

All those who participate in design, from interaction designers to usability engineers, fall victim to the same kinds of challenges when trying to bring good design into the world. From politics, to hubris, to downright incompetence, what can we learn by examining the causes of our failures? Scott thinks we can learn everything, much more than studying our successes. This talk, explores why designers fail and offers advice on how to learn from and triumph in the face of these situations.
