Biography

Sheridan Titman is an influential researcher and thought leader in the fields of corporate finance and investments. While exploring financial topics in general, he also leads research efforts in the areas of real estate finance and investment, and energy finance and innovation.

Titman is a professor of finance at the McCombs School of Business, The University of Texas at Austin, where he has been the director of the Energy Management and Innovation Center, and a member of the Real Estate Finance and Investment Center. He is a past president of the American Finance Association, and a current director of both the Asia Pacific Finance Association and the Western Finance Association.

Besides his academic writing, Titman also writes and contributes to articles for the general business press on energy policy and other topics from a financial economist's perspective. Having co-authored a leading advanced corporate finance textbook entitled "Financial Markets and Corporate Strategy," he has also served on the editorial boards of leading academic journals.

He has served on the faculties of UCLA, the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology, and Boston College. He has also worked in Washington D.C. as special assistant to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Economic Policy. He is a research associate of the National Bureau of Economic Research.
