Biography

Shobha Hamal Gurung is Associate Professor of Sociology and Women and Gender Studies at Southern Utah University and the Program Director of SUU's Nepal Studies Program. Her research focus is gender and labor; globalization, migration, and transnational studies; South Asia and international studies; and social justice and human rights. Her broad expertise on the lives of Nepali women is reflected in these publications: "Growing Up Hindu: Mapping the Memories of a Nepali Woman in the United States" (2008); "Nepali Female Migrants and Informalization of Domestic and Care Work: Service or Servitude?" (2010); "Sex Trafficking and the Sex Trade Industry: The Processes and Experiences of Nepali Women"(2014); and "Dynamics and Ramifications of US Immigration and Visa Policies: Nepali Transnational Workers, Families, and Children in the United States" (2015).

Her book Nepali Migrant Women: Resistance and Survival in America is published by Syracuse University Press in their longstanding and critically acclaimed Gender and Globalization Series. This book is a pioneer in documenting the gendered experiences of educated and professional migrant women who work in ethnically segmented labor markets in Boston and New York.

She has presented her scholarly work at the numbers of regional, national, and international conferences. Her current research project examines the socio-cultural and emotional lives of Bhutanese refugees of Nepali origin in Salt Lake City and Seattle.

She earned her Ph.D. in Sociology at Northeastern University.
