

Theresa Granger

Clinical Assistant Professor of Social Work Dept. of Nursing at USC Suzanne Dworak-Peck School of Social Work

Los Angeles, CA, US

Advanced practice nursing expert focused on homelessness, social determinants of health, and community-based involvement.

Biography

Theresa Granger serves as clinical assistant professor in the Department of Nursing's Family Nurse Practitioner program. Dr. Granger is a licensed, nationally certified family nurse practitioner with prescriptive authority who practices in the state of Washington.

Prior to joining USC, she was an adjunct faculty member at Maryville University, a visiting professor at Chamberlain College of Nursing, and an Assistant Professor at Seattle University College of Nursing. While at Seattle University, Dr. Granger was awarded a Community-Based Research fellowship through the Seattle University Youth Initiative. Dr. Granger also participated in the Leadership Education In Adolescent Health (LEAH) program through the University of Washington's Division of Adolescent Medicine.

Dr. Granger has been a nurse and family nurse practitioner for more than 20 years. An expert in the area of adolescent high-risk behavior, she has focused clinical and research interests on the many aspects of adolescent growth and development, specifically the effects that family relationships have on positive and negative aspects of development. She also has extensive experience in the medical management of complex adolescent, adult and geriatric patients.

Dr. Granger is passionate about improving the lives of those who are homeless, uninsured or under insured, and has worked as a volunteer medical provider for a homeless youth clinic in Seattle, Washington. Currently, Dr. Granger works with local communities helping them set up no-cost medical clinics.

Granger received her bachelor's and master's degrees in nursing from Washington State University. Her PhD in nursing research is from the University of Colorado College of Nursing.

Grand Challenges

Ensure healthy development for all youth

Each year, more than six million young people receive treatment for severe mental, emotional, or behavioral problems. Strong evidence shows us how to prevent many behavioral health problems before they emerge. By unleashing the power of prevention through widespread use of proven approaches, we can help all youth grow up to become healthy and productive adults (American Academy of Social Work & Social Welfare, 2018).

Close the health gap

More than 60 million Americans experience devastating one-two punches to their health—they have inadequate access to basic health care while also enduring the effects of discrimination, poverty, and dangerous environments that accelerate higher rates of illness. Innovative and evidence-based social strategies can improve health care and lead to broad gains in the health of our entire society (American Academy of Social Work & Social Welfare, 2018).

End homelessness

During the course of a year, nearly 1.5 million Americans will experience homelessness for at least one night. Periods of homelessness often have serious and lasting effects on personal development, health, and well-being. Our challenge is to expand proven approaches that have worked in communities across the country, develop new service innovations and technologies, and adopt policies that promote affordable housing and basic income security (American Academy of Social Work & Social Welfare, 2018).
