Dividing Estates Between Family and Charity the $10 Trillion Dilemma

It's a convention speech for the ages. How much money should we leave our children? Does fair mean equal? What are the risks of leaving too much wealth too soon, and will money destroy our children and their will to work? What about those who have no children? As the greatest generation of wealth creators near retirement, reconciling how their estate will be divided is proving both complicated and emotional.

It's Time For the Will Talk....

Wealth management professionals, lawyers and accountant are often baffled when clients refuse to write or update their wills. More than 50% of North American adults have no will and an estimated 40% have badly out-dated estate documents. Over the Next 20 years, more than $10 trillion dollars will be inherited. For some, this wealth transfer will be smooth, efficient and bring out the best in family. For other families, this wealth transfer will be shrouded in secrecy.
