

Wendy Parker, J.D.

Professor of Law at Wake Forest University

Winston-Salem, NC, US

Parker uses her expertise in Constitutional Law to inform her research on discrimination and equal protections in education and employment.

Biography

Wendy Parker is a civil rights scholar and advocate whose research has largely focused on desegregation, discrimination, and equal protection in schools and the workplace. As an expert in Constitutional Law, Parker identifies the ways in which the law has intentionally and unintentionally created inequalities for certain segments of the population. Her research analyzes and proposes reforms that promote racial, ethnic, and gender equality. Prior to teaching, Parker litigated school desegregation cases as a Skadden Arps Fellow and staff attorney for the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights. She was also a trial attorney for the U.S. Department of Justice.
