From the Great White North: Survey the landscape of Canadian politics and international affairs analysis with Fair Observer's Canadian Editor

Zach Paikin is a grassroots Liberal activist and a Canadian political commentator. He is the Canada Editor at Fair Observer, a columnist for Canada's iPolitics, a blogger for The Huffington Post Canada, and he contributes research on international affairs to several Washington-based think tanks and institutes.

Zach has written extensively for various Canadian publications, with a featured column at The Prince Arthur Herald and a weekly blog for Konekt Magazine online. His work has also been published in the National Post, Landmark Report, The Sentry, The Blue & White, among others. He is known for his direct and precise analysis of the Middle East and Canadian politics.

Currently a member of the board of directors of the Mount Royal Liberal Association, he was also a candidate for National Policy Chair of the Liberal Party of Canada at the party's 2012 biennial convention.

Originally from Toronto, Zach now resides in Montreal.
